BOSTON'S NEW PULPIT STAR.

A PREACHER WHO ASSAILS ALL DOGMAS AND CRITICISES HIS AUDIENCES-SCIEN-TISTS AND PHILOSOPHERS CALLED TO AC-COUNT-HOW THE HUB IS INFERIOR TO EDINBURGH.

[Correspondence of the Graphic.] Boston, January 16 .- Probably it was owing to the liberality of the Philippiar church that Paul was enabled to dwell

"two whole years in his own hired house in Rome, and there to receive all that came unto him, preaching the kingdom of God and teaching those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ with all confidence, no man forbidding him," as well as combating error in all its forms. Religious Boston thinks a modern Paul has come to the city, and is making quite a stir among the people. "Did you see that well-proportioned, two-hundred-pound specimen of a man, with a fine head resting upon broad shoul-ders, covered with lightish hair, and with a face of hightish complexion above a heavy, she is gradually asserting her position long, and thick beard and mustache to as one of the most important communities match, pass into Tremont Temple about the in the civilized world. [Great applause.]

(Apthe old and new school, thus including Hux- plause.] Of one thing I am quite sure, that ley, Spencer, Mill, Frothingham, Agassis, there is not an American politician between and others, whose peculiar philosophies are the Atlantic and the Pacific who would not attracting attention in both the Old and at the present moment be content to give New World. Mr. Cook fortifies his arguments with a perfect avalanche of authorities in both natural and demonstrated science, in which bioplasm, unity of consciousness, the immortality of enstinct, the contrasts between the automatic and the influential, the relations of the soul and body, are elaborated in the most complete and scholarry manner.

education at Andover, Mass., and then travelled abroad extensively, visiting all the in carrying out this purpose, he spent some time within the walls of the lunatic asylum at Somerville. A curious place, indeed, for one to go to acquire theological or scientific information among those unfortunates, of whom it might be fittingly written "euthonary," with all its old Greek meaning. No doubt Mr. Cook had a method in his course of study, original with himself, which has evidently been one of extraordinary breadth, and has pressed hard upon his brain. He possesses a lymphatic body, a large physique, and a nervous temperament; and his style of delivery reminds one of a general on a foraging expedition through an enemy's country. AUDACIOUS AND AGGRESSIVE. He claims the acquaintance of such men read like a book the inner consciousness of is very confident, egotistical, and somebody All who have attended his Monday noon lectures admire his learning and his audacity. In the outset he blandly told the culture of the "Hub" that the small philosopher is a great character in New England; a logical conclusion by guessing at one-half ter and cheers.] Should I go you may exand multiplying it by two. Massachusetts's Emergon, he said, bad remarked that because popular information is more widely diffused here than elsewhere the whole population of ladies and centlemen are out Upon his return from abroad Mr. Cook went into the pulpit. He first attracted attention at Lynn, where he preached before the shoemakers, but his efforts there did not seem to be appreciated, and so Mr. Cook came to Boston, at the instance of some young men of the Christian Association the reverend gentleman to receive a fair consideration for his trouble. His lectures first began in the Meionaon. His fame spread, and the Meionaon became too small to hold his audiences and he mayor it to he may he ma to hold his audiences, and he moved into Park-Street church, and that proving unequal to his drawing power he went to the Tremont Temple, which, every Monday and in each case are unabridged, unaltered, and illustrated. INFERIORITY OF THE BOSTONESE.

Mr. Cook could not have come to a better place than Boston with his peculiar philosophical erudition, and the gentleman seems to be full of it. In fact, he has inspired a popular investigation into those subjects which have long been neglected or considered as too dangerous for Boston people to consider. He is inviting sharp criticism by his bold, audacious attacks on Huxley, Spencer, Mill, and others, in the way of biology, and has challenged our home transcendentalists and free-religionists to a war of words. His audiences represent all shades of religious opinion. Men with high foreheads and bald heads, women who manage the inevitable sewing-circles and run the church kitchens, and representatives from the various theological schools in the city and vicinity attend his lectures regularly. All may not comprehend his language, for some of his phrases and technical terms are known only to the unabridged dictionaries; yet his audiences pretend to derive great satisfaction from his lectures. Even the Normal School girls stray into the Temple to learn the difference between the dead and the living protoplasm, as associated with the fundamental doctrine of Christianity; while shop-clerks, instead of idling away their noon hour at the saloons, take standing-room in the rear of the hall to learn that the history of religion is an immense anti-climax; that Christianity is a catastrophe, and that 4,000 years hence men will walk in darkness again.

But whatever the effect of Mr. Cook's lectures upon the people it is thought that he has committed a great mistake in his comparison between Boston and Edinburgh, in which Boston appears at a great disadvantage. Edinburgh, he says, has more right to intellectual haughtiness than the "Hub" in the matter of culture, metaphysics, exact science, and political economy. Mr. Cook also thinks that Boston will stand stupidly stiff when asked to kneel by the coming evangelists. But the crowning insult of all! Dickens said once, and printed the opinion.

Now, that is too much for a Boston man or woman of culture to our people, and even the small children who have killed time in repeating their Greek and Latin lessons have found a relief in reading various theological and philosophical works cited by him in the course of his masterly arguments against radical transcendentalism, evolution, and materialism. The book-stores are searched for volumes, the character of which would stagger the most learned theologians and scientists of Harvard College, but this only shows how intent is the Boston mind to soar after the indefinite, and to blow intellectual soapbubbles.
